From today's perspective, the 16th century was a gruesome age. People toiled from sunup to sundown, surrendering the meager fruits of their labors for the appetites of brutish landlords and distant rulers. Yet, it was this very century that saw the emergence of the modern age. Gutenberg invented the art of printing; Copernicus showed that the earth revolved around the sun and thus was merely a part - not the center - of the universe; and Martin Luther was both cause and catalyst for extreme social change.

Our American context today is different, but disruption, injustice and social division are upon us once again! Secure in his beliefs, Luther refused to retract his confrontational writings, even as the world he was born into crumbles. What can we learn from this?
